1. Field of the Invention The present invention is directed to the field of providing assistance to the driver of a vehicle, such as a car. More particularly, the invention is directed to the field of providing voice-activated or voice-directed assistance to the driver of a vehicle. The invention is directed to the field of monitoring the driver of a vehicle, and providing the driver with voice-directed, vehicle-based assistance in response to detecting the driver is falling asleep while driving.

2. Description of the Related Art The problem of falling asleep while driving has existed for thousands of years and continues to pose a significant problem in the driving community. As one example of the problem, driving while tired can be viewed in various ways. For example, driving while tired can result in a tired driver exhibiting lack of attentiveness, driving with eyes closed, mouth open, snoring, facial features that are twisted and distorted, and jerky movements and hand/foot movements. These physical manifestations may cause other drivers on the road and pedestrians nearby to become concerned about the ability of the driver to operate the vehicle safely. The problem of falling asleep while driving exists across the nation and across multiple industries and jobs. Employers and workers in many occupations have an interest in providing some means to monitor the performance of their employees and ensure that they are operating the vehicle safely at all times. Some employees report that they have fallen asleep while driving their vehicles, and a number of studies have been conducted to find ways to prevent such occurrences in the future. For example, drivers have been asked to keep track of time spent sleeping and the frequency of drowsy driving episodes, and these metrics have shown that drivers are able to fall asleep while driving at significant rates. Unfortunately, there does not exist a workable solution for monitoring drivers while driving, and even with the prior knowledge of the amount of time a driver has been sleeping during the prior day, it is still difficult

Epstein-Barr virus (EBV)-carrying B cells are critical contributors to the development of many EBV-associated malignancies, including Burkitt's lymphoma (BL), diffuse large B cell lymphoma (DLBCL) and Hodgkin's lymphoma (HL). For these malignancies, transformation appears to arise from a genetically altered virus-transformed B cell that secretes a set of antigens, collectively termed the malignant transformation antigens (MAT), and these proteins have the potential to induce an anti-EBV T cell response. Most EBV-associated malignancies are readily cured by chemotherapy and radiation, and this host anti-tumor immune response is considered a key determinant in patient outcome. However, these therapies are largely ineffective in cases of drug resistant or relapsed/refractory disease. Therefore, there remains a need in the art for new therapies that target components of the immunosuppressive microenvironment in cases where conventional therapies are ineffective. In this regard, the present invention satisfies this need. Lightning bolts in a wave of electrical waves Sometimes the most commonplace kind of wave can look anything but ordinary. The science of quantum mechanics describes waves that differ from physical waves in the way that they interact with particles. As waves, particles are more general than anything that can be seen in ordinary experience. A particle travels in a fixed direction; a wave can change direction. In an ordinary wave, the shape and direction of the wave is defined by the energy of the waves, which is carried by the wave's vibrational pattern, or direction, along the wavelength. These waves,
